Building Communities with People with Learning Disabilities

www.larche.org.uk
L’Arche communities are places where people with and without learning disabilities share life together. How we do this is evolving. The professional landscape in which we find ourselves is undergoing great change. The introduction of individualised budgets and the Valuing People Now strategy in England and Wales and Same as You in Scotland will have a radical effect.

Two questions are emerging; “How do we move forward as a first class support provider?” and at the same time “How do we build community?”

In the midst of all these changes, it is essential that we hold onto the fundamental values which make L’Arche unique.

- Our commitment as people with and without learning disabilities to sharing life.
- Our commitment to supporting each person with or without learning disabilities to grow to their full human potential, including in their spiritual life.
- Our commitment to decisions being taken at the lowest possible level in the organisation and a culture where competition has no place.
- Our commitment to L’Arche as an international movement. We are part of an expanding federation of over 130 Communities worldwide from Australia to Zimbabwe.

For L’Arche it is not a question of choosing between either providing excellent professional support or building community based on our core values. One is an integral part of the other. L’Arche’s organisational structure is underpinned by an absolute commitment to providing excellent professional support which not only meets, but exceeds inspection requirements.

In this review, people who share life in L’Arche Communities reflect upon their different personal experiences and some of the key issues facing L’Arche today; independence, inclusion, friendship and spirituality.

- L’Arche does not have to choose between building community and being a good support service. One is vital to the other.
- Some things about L’Arche make it different from other support organisations.
  - We are people with and without learning disabilities who share life together.
  - We want people to grow and to have a spiritual life if they wish to.
  - We like to make our decisions together whenever we can.
  - There are L’Arche communities all over the world.
The UK’s National Speaking Group ensures the inclusion of people ‘with learning disabilities’ in debates which affect their lives and communities

01
Inclusion

Last October, Richard Keagan-Bull, spoke to the International Assembly of L’Arche in Kolkata, India about his role as Chair of the L’Arche UK National Speaking Group.

L’Arche has always been good at speaking on behalf of people who can’t communicate. This is a valuable skill, but it is not a substitute for including people in a decision making process. The UK’s National Speaking Group was set up to ensure the inclusion of people with learning disabilities in debates which affect their lives and Communities.

“As an organisation which values difference, it was expected that delegates with a learning disability should play a role in The Assembly in India,” says John Sargent, National Co-ordinator.

The charge of tokenism is easy to levy. Just by putting someone onto a group does not mean they understand the discussion. The whole thrust of the Mental Capacity Act is that capacity is decision specific; that people have the capacity to make some decisions but not others. It is important to recognise that people have a variety of abilities that allow them to join decision-making processes in various ways and at various levels.

People with learning disabilities have always been part of the decision-making process in their own L’Arche Communities. The traditional weekly ‘House Night’ grew from a desire to create a forum in which everyone could ‘own’ and share the plans for the week ahead.

Within their Communities in the UK, people with learning disabilities are involved in interviews and appraisals, monthly listening groups and Community councils.

In L’Arche Bognor the Committee meeting of local trustees always begins with a report from one of the people with disabilities living in the Community. In the Lambeth Community they have recently begun a newsletter written by people with learning disabilities, for people with learning disabilities.

In the first edition Richard Keagan-Bull talks about another recent trip, this time to Auschwitz.

“I think in life we should try and understand each other and work things out and never want war- just be happy with what we’ve got. It doesn’t matter if you’re black or white, if you can speak or not speak-it’s what you can give that counts.”

- The National Speaking Group enables people with learning disabilities to have a say about things that affect their lives.
- Some people with learning disabilities are able to make some decisions but not others.
- People with learning disabilities are involved in lots of decision making in L’Arche Communities.
Linda will have the flat she always dreamed of as part of a community, a network of established relationships which will support her to take new risks and to grow.

Independence

In L’Arche Liverpool Linda is one of three people watching with special interest as a purpose-built block of flats slowly takes shape. Everyone in the block will have their own front door and a lease in their own name. There will also be a flat for assistants, so some support will always be available. Linda will have the flat she has always dreamed of, as part of a community, where a network of established relationships will support her to take risks and to grow. In return Linda in her independence will bring a new richness and diversity to community life.

This type of independence has always been embraced by L’Arche. People with learning disabilities in the Lambeth, Kent, Edinburgh, Inverness, Ipswich and Liverpool Communities are living in their own flats and yet are still very clearly part of their local L’Arche Community, with all the relationships and informal support that brings.

Veronica from the Lambeth Community says “I need my own space. It’s my dream.”

In the Kent Community, Vince lives happily in his own flat. “It means I can eat when I want to,” he says.

A year ago, George moved into his own flat in Edinburgh. He had been keen to have his own place for a long time. The move has given George the domestic independence he craved. “Doing the washing up, doing the bed, doing the floor is best.

I put my sheets in the washing machine. You press the button and put the powder in and that’s it, it takes the muck away.”

There is a natural tension between independence and a desire for community. What we all need is a balance between the freedom of independence and the security of community.

John Redwood, Community Leader in Edinburgh says “Independent living for people with and without learning disabilities may imply freedom, opportunity and happiness but the reality can be very different. We may think we long for independence, when we really crave a form of interdependence: a place of our own but supported by a network of relationships and activities that keeps us connected and engaged with the world.

“We would argue that the ideal is interdependent rather than independent living. It is the relationships that George has already established in L’Arche and the wider community that protect him from isolation and loneliness.”

- L’Arche has always supported people with learning disabilities to live independently.
- Living in Community or being interdependent protects people who live on their own from being lonely.
About a year had passed since Yvonne had suddenly been taken from us. The house had slowly gone back to its normal rhythm. Bob hadn’t mentioned her for a long time and I was nervous about raising memories which might be painful for him. He sat patiently in his wheelchair while I did my best to untangle the laces of his boots. Bob started to bang his foot on the floor and make the humming sound that was his unmistakable impersonation of Yvonne. “You still miss her and it hurts.” I said. Bob nodded and quietly said her name. “Me too.” I said.

Caring for each other in Community means so much more than ensuring an acceptable level of material comfort. Our hearts are hungry for relationship, mutual respect and the nourishment of our spirit.

Since its beginning L’Arche has treasured the sacred gift of the spirit within each person. God is present to us through each member of our Community. Ensuring the availability, for those who wish them, of times of prayer, membership of a faith community (such as a parish) and celebrations of the feasts of the year of your religious tradition, are only the beginning of how we have learned to nourish the spirit within each person. Each of us in L’Arche is called to listen deeply to those with whom we have chosen to share our lives in community. We listen to each other with our eyes and with our hearts. “What gives you life?” “What makes you smile?” “What is your heart hungry for?”

To every blade of grass God has given an angel that bends over and whispers in its ear, ‘Grow, grow, grow!’

03 Spirituality

Much good work is being done in academic circles today which confirms the insight that L’Arche has held from its beginning; to flourish as people we need opportunities to nourish our inner lives. Those people in our society who have a learning disability have too often been deprived of this essential element of a full and rich life.

For some of us, finding space, silence, creativity and meaningful relationships is easy. Some of us need help to find the food for our spirit that is essential if we are to continue to grow to our full potential. Spiritual accompaniment, retreats, a chance to have our voice heard in decisions about our religious choices are a basic right of each one of us, if that is what we want.

In a world that is often too busy to be still, a world that often seems to value people in material or economic categories, the members of L’Arche want to say something different. We do not live on bread alone. Life in its fullness, the life of the spirit, is a gift to be treasured and nourished in each one of us.

• Caring for each other in L’Arche is about more than making each other comfortable. It is about listening to each other’s needs.

• It is important to find time for a spiritual life if this makes us happy. For L’Arche this is a basic right.
“Will you be my friend?” This was the question that started L’Arche. It was put to Jean Vanier by a man with a learning disability living in a large institution. Jean, seeking an authentic way to say ‘yes’, invited some people from this institution to come and live with him, and so L’Arche began.

Friendships continue to be at the heart of L’Arche – friendships that transcend the categories into which we all too easily put people; assistant, person with a learning disability, committee member, etc. Friendships don’t recognise these distinctions because friendships are relationships based on the mutual attraction of one person to another, not because of what you do but because of who you are.

Recently L’Arche’s stance on friendships has been challenged. There are those who take the view that friendship between ‘service users’ and ‘employees’ who are paid to support them is unprofessional and therefore not possible. We would prefer to say it is ‘non professional’: a mutual choice to go beyond the boundaries of professional relationships of support.

The debate centres on whether it is possible, as we contend, to provide a support service that meets the required professional standards and at the same time to be friends with the people you are supporting.

At policy level this can be seen as an example of the clash between what is referred to as the ‘safeguarding agenda’ on the one hand and the ‘personalisation’ agenda on the other. The safeguarding agenda is concerned with keeping vulnerable adults safe – but safe from what? Life is inherently risky. Attempts to eliminate risk completely from people’s lives, will potentially also eliminate any possibility of leading a meaningful adult life.

The personalisation agenda is concerned with putting people with learning disabilities in control of their own lives. The messages coming through from people with learning disabilities and their families are clear. They want real, fulfilling friendships – if these friendships overlap with people in professional roles, so be it.

In the long run, we believe that this is good news for L’Arche. Essentially, it is an affirmation of our identity and our mission. People with learning disabilities are still asking that same question. “Will you be my friend?” We hope that L’Arche will continue to offer an authentic “Yes”.

- Friendships are at the heart of L’Arche.
- Friendships take time and help people to grow.
- Friendships keep people safe.
- L’Arche says “Yes” to friendships.
Supporting L’Arche in the UK

L’Arche communities in the UK receive no financial help from government sources to fund new properties or to modify existing ones. This means that to improve or expand our services in order to meet the changing needs of the people with learning disabilities we support, we must raise the money ourselves. Last year we began an appeal to help fund the start-up costs for the new L’Arche communities in Glasgow and Manchester. So far we have raised nearly £50,000 towards these projects, but more donations are needed to hit the £250,000 target.

We must also raise money to help our small team of administration staff and volunteers based in Silsden, West Yorkshire. They support all the L’Arche Communities in the UK by disseminating best practice, promoting and monitoring good standards and ensuring the charity meets its legal and financial requirements. Without this team, communities would be over-burdened with legal responsibilities, leaving less time to support our members. Their role is invaluable.

Being part of the L’Arche International Federation brings many gifts to people living in L’Arche communities and membership of this worldwide family is embraced and welcomed. The same is true of our spiritual activities such as retreats and L’Arche training, which are so vital to maintaining our standards, vision and identity, but which are often difficult to fund from traditional sources.

L’Arche in the UK also raises money to help support other L’Arche communities around the world. In particular, we have a special relationship with the communities in Uganda and Zimbabwe. Financial help is vital and can make the difference between life or death for the men, women and children with learning disabilities living there.

We thank all our supporters for their generous gifts through donations, legacies and grants. Your support is vital to our work and can make a real and lasting difference to the lives of people with learning disabilities both in the UK and overseas. Please continue to support us.
